Great Anniversary Sale!!

The Greatest Trade Event of the Fall Season.

Forty-Seven Years of Continued Growth and Advancement.

It is with pardonable pride that we point to the marvelous growth of the New York Store as indicated in some degree by the above cuts. We now enter upon our forty-eighth year with largely increased facilities, having just completed extensive alterations and additions that were rendered necessary by our constantly increasing business. The large open area that formerly existed in the store has been closed, giving us substantially the equivalent of an entire floor. In addition to this we have put in an entirely new electric light plant, which, combined with the fact that our building is open on four sides, gives us a building unequalled in light and ventilation. In addition to this we have, during the summer, equipped our entire building with automatic sprinklers, which make our building absolutely safe from fire, an improvement not found, we believe, in any other retail establishment in this part of the country. These additions to our already mammoth establishment will enable us to exhibit our merchandise and accommodate customers much better than ever before. A business of the magnitude of ours could not be reached and constantly grow unless it possessed the absolute confidence of the people. This we feel we have had in a marked degree in the past, and propose to hold the same and merit it in the future to an even greater degree. This great store, occupying space nearly twice as large as any other two Indiana stores combined, and employing nearly twice as many people as any other two stores, a fact which is entirely obvious to any one who cares to give the matter the least attention, will continue in the future as it has in the past, to lead the procession in modern merchandising in this part of the country. The facilities for buying enjoyed by this house, both in America and abroad, having resident buyers and offices in New York, Paris, Manchester, England; Chemnitz, Germany, and St. Gall, Switzerland, are not equalled by any mercantile house in this part of the country, and by comparatively few in the larger cities. We take this opportunity to express our appreciation of the patronage that has been given us. In the past, and pledge ourselves to continue the same business principles which have given us this confidence and patronage from the people of Indiana. During the coming week we are prepared to offer, in every department of the store, some special inducement in both quality and price of new fall merchandise that will make it to the interest of every one in central Indiana to attend our GREAT ANNIVERSARY SALE. Every item we mention will be found exactly as represented, not only in this advertisement, but in every advertisement published by the New York Store. Special attractions every day this week. Watch the papers.

Dressmaking

A dressmaker that fails to go to the fashion centers at the proper time might just as well look through her past season's fashion plates for styles.

Note—We take great care in selecting the proper time, i. e., by having our Paris and New York representatives keeping us informed. Miss Mullen and Mrs. Johnson have just returned, having spent the past week looking up new ideas.

Miss Trimble returned from Paris. See her continuous description of the new gowns in theater programmes.

A call on our ladies' tailoring department will convince you that we are exclusive as to style and workmanship.

Anniversary Sale of... Black Silks...

We were extremely fortunate in securing this lot of black silks at a recent receiver's sale of one of the leading silk manufacturers of the country. ated that he has made $400,000 since the first night of Cynano.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker, the famous London preacher, who has announced his intention of retiring from the ministry, was the son of a stonecutter. He is seventy-one years old, and got his D. D. degree from the University of Chicago. A short time ago he made a sensation by declaring that "the stage cannot be put down. It responds to an instinct which is ineradicable."

Baker Washington, the thirteen-year-old son of Booker T. Washington, the famous negro teacher and speaker, is a skillful, trained brickmaker. He knows how to lay out a piece of work, use plummet, line and trowel, mix mortar and handle bricks. He can do as neat a job as almost any man at work in the brick buildings which have been erected at Tuskegee Institute during the last few years.

The Methodist "twentieth century movement" to save 2,000,000 souls before the end of 1901, is about to be put under way. The plan is briefly to enlist 20,000 active workers in the movement, each of whom shall pledge himself to secure ten new members for the church before December 31, 1901. The call will be given first to the bishops, and through them to the annual conferences, where the presiding elder will call each pastor presents the movement to his congregation.

No more fitting memorial of the late Mary Kingsley could have been suggested than that which a few of her many admirers in Liverpool have decided upon to keep her work in perpetual remembrance. The idea of a Mary Kingsley Hospital for the treatment of tropical diseases must commend itself to all those who knew and thing of the intrepid African traveler and the service of humanity. The new hospital is to be erected in close proximity to the Royal Southern Hospital, and will, it is believed, supply a long-felt want in the medical institutions of the city.

Communication by cable between Washington and Manila is not only expensive, but messages are sent in a roundabout way. At present the route over which each letter must travel is as follows:

To New York, by land; to Valencia, Ireland, by cable; to Brighton, England, by cable; to Havre, France, by cable; to Marseilles, by land; to Alexandria, Egypt, by cable; to Suez, Egypt, by land; to Aden, Arabia, by cable; to Bombay, India, by cable; to Madras, by land; to Singapore, Malayan peninsula, by cable; to Saigon, Cochinchina, by cable; to Hong-Kong, by cable; to Manila, Philippine Islands, by cable. The total distance is, approximately, fourteen thousand miles.

With fingers weary and worn,
With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sat through the weary night
Fighting her needle and thread.

Stitch, stitch, stitch,
Till all the lamp burned low,
Till the dawn began to glow.

Because, forthwith, she was dreading

FOR FEMINE READERS

PENALTY OF LONELINESS PAID BY THE WIVES OF PUBLIC MEN.

The Short Skirt is to be Universally Worn—The Fine Art of Dress—An Advantage of Country Life.

In a recent interview Mrs. Mark Hanna showed and spoke with feeling in the matter of the separation to which she and her husband have been obliged to grow accustomed, says Miss Helen Pitkin, writing from Boston to the New Orleans Times-Democrat. It is not often that the sentiments of the wives of public servants are so passionately confessed as in the instance mentioned, but doubtless many women echo Mrs. Hanna's sorrow in their hearts and hope for the day when great events and issues will demand other agents and the old home life will require these for the renouncement of the outer arena.

Few women are there who would not prefer off-hand the distinguished husband to the chronic subaltern; but women should remember in contracting marriages with Titons among the minnows that she is of man's life a thing two-thirds apart. He belongs to the people whether as a maker of books, orations, policies, canvases, great scenes in real or mimic life. He lives in the calcium and aspires to the light. Applause is sweet to him; he grows to feel his importance as an integral of the world's affairs; home becomes no longer an address, but the abode of an attached comfort only a greenroom in which to prepare for the larger stage. Great men love their wives, doubtless, having great souls, perhaps just as unimportant men do, but there are only a score and four hours in any man's day, time being so commonly that any man may buy. And the demands of affairs intrude upon his leisure and almost resent the ex- pending of moments for his creature needs.

I heard a woman say once—she is the wife of a famous man—that she could never have married a man who was not or gave promise of being distinguished. One can understand her saying so at an occasion like a woman's luncheon, where everyone present would be inspired with envy for her good fortune. But there is another side, shown, despite herself, after a succession of long evenings spent alone when her distinguished lord orated and some of his constituents and prepared speeches and suffered interviews and traveled far in the interest of his party. The evening lamp seemed to burn dim for her, and there was an audible stillness in the house. I thought then, when there was no audible about to hear her expressions of pride, that the woman with the distinguished husband paid dearly for her privilege. It is all right when the hand begins to play "See the Conquering Hero Comes" when he appears, and his theories are quoted and his features and epigrams are in the papers. But when he is gone, and the wife is left alone, the wife of a public man is a woman who has had to endure the tender-hearted spectator had to laugh one rainy day along Broadway at the sight of a woman, baby on one arm, raised umbrella in the other hand, who vainly tried to hold up her fashionable long, unfashionably shabby, dress skirt out of the wet. In the struggle something had to go. It was the baby. The woman dropped it. Every man that ran to pick it up was swearing under his breath at the prevailing fashions in woman's dress that would allow such things. No need for such scenes nowadays—we have the Madonna of the Gold Skirt.

Things to Avoid in Dress.

New York Sun.

"Avoid the obvious in dress," said the woman who thinks as much about what her friends wear as about her own clothes, "and be especially careful at this time of year. I know that it is now one of the most natural things in the world to put a red velvet bow on your black hat. It looks so warm and cheerful on these overcast autumn days. But avoid it as carefully as you would a green veil. The same thought will occur to nine women out of every ten. Seven out of that nine will put

The Short Skirt Prevails.

New York Evening Sun.

The short skirt—gold skirt, if you choose—has lightened the burdens of shopping; it has lessened the danger of taking cold in wet weather; it has aided the housemaid in her task of sweeping and scrubbing; it has made house cleaning easy to the housewife. It had but one step farther to go to complete the circle of satisfaction—physical, commercial and domestic—it has brought to women. That step is now complete—We have the Madonna of the Gold Skirt. Your mothers, wheeling their baby coaches along the uptown side streets and through the parks, no longer trail several yards of dusty dry goods behind them, nor by endeavoring to hold it up in one hand do they lose all steering power over the baby coach. They wear gold skirts. Mothers minus baby coaches—but plus, oh, very plus, children in arms—wear gold skirts, and they wear a smile of peace and holy joy, let it be understood, that you won't find excelled by any expression of any Madonna by the oldest of the old masters. Think of the Madonna of the trailing skirt, so familiar to us upon every street and in every shop for years past, and think of all that she has had to endure! Never did the train look so pathetically inappropriate as when clutched in the hand of some poor little woman who was trying to keep hold of her baby with the other. The tender-hearted spectator had to laugh one rainy day along Broadway at the sight of a woman, baby on one arm, raised umbrella in the other hand, who vainly tried to hold up her fashionable long, unfashionably shabby, dress skirt out of the wet. In the struggle something had to go. It was the baby. The woman dropped it. Every man that ran to pick it up was swearing under his breath at the prevailing fashions in woman's dress that would allow such things. No need for such scenes nowadays—we have the Madonna of the Gold Skirt.

their ideas into practical effect. By the very next week the bow is going to be as familiar a sight as the polka-dot chon on the sailor hat has been since the first of June. And, besides, you may be sure that your purpose will be plain to every woman who sees you. "She put that bow in her hat," said the general opinion, "because she thinks it looks bright and appropriate on these fall days."

You ought never to do anything which makes your purpose so plain to everybody that sees you. I know a dark-haired, dark-eyed woman who looks especially well in a shade of vivid yellow that not one woman in a thousand could ever put on without being a fright. Well, it suits her very well, and occasionally it would be stunning for her to appear in a dress of this color or with a bit of it somewhere about her. But she never takes it off. I never saw her at night, but I'd like to bet that she sleeps in something made of that color. Everybody's impression of her, after she has been seen once or twice dressed in this unusual way, is that she is so proud of being able to wear so unusual and unbecoming a color that she never takes it off. That is another instance of what I call the very obvious in dressing.

Blondes who persistently stick to baby blue and brunettes who insist upon tying a red ribbon about their necks at all times are other awful instances of the very obvious in dress. I think a woman ought to learn of what is becoming to her above everything else in dress. That is the most important question to be considered. But she ought to dress in a way that seems to go about dressed in a way that seems to say: "I am wearing this because it is the most becoming color in the world to me, although very few other women can ever put it on, and this little bit of red in my hat is intended as a tribute to the cool autumn days and shows that I appreciate how a woman should dress to suit the seasons." That style of dressing is the apotheosis of the obvious, and, in my opinion, very bad form if dressing is a real art.

Well-Posted Country Women.

Collier's Weekly.

The city woman lives in the midst of excitement. Incidents jostle one another. The morning and evening papers and the bevy of intervening extras keep her at high pressure, and she is constantly hearing comment on what is going on wherever she turns. Yet she is not always as well informed as her country cousin, who takes, and reads from cover to cover, an illustrated weekly, and who digests and assimilates every item of news, pores over the letters of foreign correspondents, and knows every step of current history, whether it concern the Boer war, the Indian famine, or the Boxer uprising in China. You meet the mistress of the farmhouse, a woman cumbered with much inevitable drudgery, yet quiet, serene and untroubled, even in the boarding season, when her home is thronged with guests, and she is surrounded by people who have come from town to rest among green fields. This gentlewoman has opinions about expansion and imperialism, she has views about politics, and can talk intelligently with her husband and sons about the merits and demerits of the opposing candidates, and what is more to the point, she bases her conclusions upon her reading, and enforces her position by arguments not easily refuted. The country vote is always a make-weight to be reckoned with when contests are decided, and, back of the country vote, a silent yet potent force is the conscience of the country woman, her poles, her thought, her intellect not to be ignored, the sentiment of "The Man with the Hoe" was a manifest injustice to the American farmer—all the more that the farmer's wife in our country is the direct antithesis in every particular of the rural type of femininity in the old world.

Odd and Ends.

To clean unvarnished black walnut rub it with a soft flannel cloth which has been wrung out of either sweet or sour milk.

White chiffon tucked with gold thread, and laid over gold tissue is one of the latest and prettiest fashions for vests, collars and the like.

Canned goods of all kinds should be emptied from the cans as soon as they are opened. They should never on any account be left to stand in the cans.

Pure white collars are as popular during the winter season as they have been during the summer, and are being prepared in cloth as often as in lighter materials for house and evening wear. The white cloth gown and white felt hat, in combination with heavy furs, will be favorite fad of the woman to whom expense and durability are of no concern.
